Olympics Are Opening With a Whir As Copters Aid Thousands of Police

LOS ANGELES - A security net that law enforcement officials say is the largest and most expensive ever imposed on a peacetime enterprise in the United States has tightened here for the Olympic Games, which were opening Saturday. Thousands of athletes have moved into Olympic villages at three universities.

Elsewhere, thousands of federal agents. National Guardsmen and local law officers were on alert.

More Olympic Games coverage. Page 13.

So are more than a dozen dogs trained to detect explosives and scores of human bomb-disposal experts; two paramilitary hostage rescue teams; and a task force of anti-terrorist specialists from U.S. and foreign intelligence services. There is a huge arsenal specially assembled for the Olympics that includes machine guns with silencers and scores of sniper rifles.

If there is a distinctive sound so far to the 1984 Summer Olympic Games, it is the chop-chop noise of helicopter rotor blades.

More than 100 belicopters have been deployed for security and support operations. Hundreds of agents from the Secret Service, the United States Marsbals Service and the State Department are here to protect foreign and American dignitaries.

The Coast Guard has assigned more than 3,000 personnel, along with an icebreaker and scores of smaller craft. Their assignment is port security, especially at nearby Long Beach Harbor during Olympic yachting competition.

The efforts to protect participants from terrorists are apparent throughout the villages. But there are no patrolling soldiers bearing automatic weapons, which at times characterized this year's Winter Olympics at Sarejevo, Yugoslavia, and the 1980 Summer Games in Moscow.

More than 100 helicopters such as this one will be used for security at the Games.

Uniformed police officers are scattered around villages and practice fields. There are hundreds of unarmed guards wearing blue berets and khakis checking identification hadges and watching fences and buildings.

Access to the villages, situated behind fences at the University of Southero California, the University of California. Los Angeles, and the University of California, Santa Barbara, is controlled by a badge system designed to confirm the identity of visitors and athletes.

New York Times Service PARIS - The European Community has been pushed into a new financial crisis barely a month after its leaders claimed they had resolved the trade bloc's protracted internal quartels over money at their summit meeting at Fontainehleau in France.

the EC's finances. This agreement was supposed to end the bitler disputes over the community's farm spending and Britain's complaint that it was paying an unfair share. The quartel had virtually paralyzed the European Community for the preceeding four years. Following the compromise, however. the EC announced ambitious plans for the "relaunching of Eu-rope," including closer integration of the 10 member nations' economies and steps to improve political cooperation. But all those schemes will be jeopardized, officials now warn, if the Fontainebleau agreement starts to fall apart, as Friday's vote suggested it might. Under the Fontainebleau compromise, the EC nations agreed to limit Britain's budget contribution during the next few years. But they also undertook to impose tighter

With Hunting Ban, Kenya Confronts A New Dilemma: Too Much Wildlife

By Alan Cowell New York Times Service

NAIROBI - They were men, so they say, of true grit, on wild and endless lands, armed only with a strip of cloth and a hag of salt and a rifle. Then, much later, the style switched, all Champagne and romance, at the zenith of the Great White Hunter on sun-blasted plains. Then, the safari died. Notorious for the posching that threatened great herds, Kenya outlawed hunting in 1977. A year later, it banned the sale of game trophies. The hunters lost their living and so did many poachers, and the herds swelled. And now this East African nation faces a new and unfamiliar problem what to do with the proliferation of game that has resulted from the hans of the late 1970s.

One proffered solution is that hunting be reintroduced to a nation marked increasingly by the contest between man and wild animal for land. Kenya's herds were greatly depleted in the 1970s by poaching and drought, according to David Western, a New York Zoological Society researcher based in

Of the bans introduced in 1977 and 1978, he said. outlawing trophy sales was the most effective in curbing poachers.

Only the rhinoceroses have continued to suffer. Their population has declined from about 20,000 to 800, supplying the market in Yemen for daggers with bandles carved of rhino horn. The only hope now for the rhinocerus, Mr. Western said, is careful management on private ranches, where the animals will be protected.

As for other species, Mr. Western has observed places where the wildebeest and zebra populations have increased by 50 percent, buffalo have doubled, and elephant herds have increased by 45 percent. But at the same time, livestock herds have blossomed, and now there is a drought that sharpens Kenva has eased its ban on hunting to the extent of permitting the pursuit of birds. But beyond that, there is a great debate.

"Wildlife is increasingly a problem," Mr. Western said, and the solutions offered are various.

competition for grazing land.

One school, composed predominantly of conservationists and hunters, argues that hunting should be reintroduced. The bunters say that they are the best conservationists, because their livelihood depends on the tending of the ecology. In any event, they say, a poacher is deserted by the prospect of encountering a safari bristling with weapons. Moreover, by this argument, Kenya's wildlife is a prime source of dollars and Deutsche marks, which are brought in by tourists who trundle through game parks in zebra-striped buses. People will pay much money to level a nife at an animal. The authorities lean toward culling the herds, Mr. Westero said. This would keep the number of animals manageable at a time when untrammeled population growth and agricultural expansion has eroded the long been practiced in Zimbabwe, apparently with in Kenya because Kenyans would not buy the meat obtained from the cull.

Some people say that nature should be left to take its course, that the animals must adjust to their cirmstances. But that position elicits other questions. The species that survive tend to be stronger, so other species are lost and ecological chains are oroken. "It is beginning to trouble a lot of people that the woodlands and bushlands are disappearing because of elephants." Mr. Western said. "People are going to have to ask very seriously whether they are going to let nature take its course." In southern Kenya, the Masai Mara national reserve covers a modest 540 square miles (1,400 square kilometers). It is part of the much bigger ecosystem of Many conservationists contend that culling destabi- Tanzania's Serengeti Plains, 5,600 square miles of

It is reckoned that there is enough range for the wildebeest and the cattle, but not enough for the animals to compete with the plantations. The conservationists' answer is to more intensively

But the picture is more complex, since south of the Tanzania-Kenya border, years of economic decline have left scant resources for wildlife management.

Armed Highwaymen Threaten Tourists in Southern France

PARIS - Highwaymen are riding the roads of southern France this summer, and French police are not entirely sure who they are or how to catch them. The bandits have a preference for stolen BMWs and Monica Gaw, an adoption expert in the State Department's Bureau of Consular Affairs, said that reasonable costs in foreign adoptions varied. They range from $500 to $3,000 in some Latin American countries, and average out to about $1,000 in countries in the Far East.

Ten years ago, about 70 percent of adoptions in the United States were handled through agencies, while 30 percent were done independently, according to Dr. Pierce. The two approaches are now about evenly split.

Some experts say that the potential for problems is enormous when prospective parents try to adopt without an agency.

When Iraq, the other party to the Gulf conflict, grants visas, local of-ficials so tightly control reporters countries as the Soviet Union and China, which is either to deny access to reporters or in closely control and monitor their activities.

The reporter's most difficult problem is gaining entry to a country. There are several countries where journalists are so rarely admitted that they are in effect prevented from doing any first-hand reporting. Among these are North Korea, Albania and Soviet-occupied Afghanistan

In addition, there are many other ountries that in recent months have admitted only a highly limited number of Western journalists and then only on very rare occasions. Entry is often restricted to those who officials believe have previously reported favorably on them. These include Iran, Nigeria, Saudi Arabia, Vietnam, Angola and Gha-

Reporters have had great diffiwar. Correspondents of The New York Times, for example, report that, since the war's intensification, many of the governments in the Gulf area, such as Kuwait and Oman, have further curbed entry by journalists.

Several countries in the Middle East, including Egypt, Israel, Jor-dan and Lebanon, have traditionally been open to Western reporters and remain so. But others, such as Syria and Libya, are quite restrictive. Syria stopped issuing multiple entry visas to journalists last fall. Since then, many Western journalists report, visa applications have gone unanswered for weeks or Restrictions bave been particulo a speech Thursday night marking the 31st anniversary of the Cuban revolution, Mr. Castro praised the Reverend Jesse L. Jackson as a man of peace and, in a conciliatory gesture, said that he would seriously consider "any ef-forts at decreasing tensions in our area and in the rest of the world, any efforts aimed at decreasing the dangers of the madness of war." He noted Thursday that the socialist system in his country and the capitalist system in the United States were "totally different," but he suggested that "peaceful coexistence" was possible.

Mr. Castro said that partly as a result of the Reverend Jackson's visit to Cuba late last month, the United States and Cuba had heldtalks in New York earlier this month oo "matters relating to immigration and other topics around

Before the speech, Western diplomats said that the Cuban govern-ment felt it had been sending sig-nals in recent months that it was interested in improving relations with the United States. U.S. officontradictory.

Mr. Castro's speech Thursday appeared to be a clear signal.

The Cuban leader said that he was oot prepared to diminish Cuba's relationship with the Soviet Union, a move which the United States has said would be important if normal diplomatic relations with Cuba were to be resumed. Formal U.S. diplomatie relations with Cuba were broken in early 1961.

Mr. Castro referred to the possibility of a "political solution" in Central America.

As evidence of his desire to lessen tensions, be said he was "even willing to cooperate" in seeking a political, rather than a military solution to the issue of independence for South-West Africa, also known as Namibia. In the past, South Africa has said that it would oot consider independence for Namibia until Cuba removed its more than 30,000 troops from Angola.

Independent analysts have said that Cuba's economy is in serious trouble. They point out that it was forced to reschedule part of hits $3.5-billion debt to Western banks this year because it could oot make scheduled payments, and they say Cuba also owes $9 billion to the Eastern bloc countries, mainly the Soviet Union.

One of the primary objectives of improving relations with the Unitcials have said that the signals have ed States would be to get the Unitbeen unclear and at times appeared ed States to end its economic blockade of the island.

KAFKA CONTAINED - Huge curtains printed with the skyline of Prague enclose "Le Siècle de Kafka" exhibition at the Pompidou Center in Paris. The show, which runs through Oct. 1, includes letters and memorabilia of Franz Kafka and his friends, sculptures and other works inspired by Kafka's writings, and "talking benches" where you can listen to readings of Kafka's works in a dozen or so languages, ranging from Czech to Japanese.

Hill of Gerbie Three Glimpses of Hapsburg Vienna

s Regeneratio PARIS — Gustav Klimt, born in 1862, died of apoplexy in 1918 — the year in which the ancient and venerable empire of the Hapsburgs, whose decadent charm he so well represents, came to an end.

Egon Schiele, a man with a tormented and brilliantly perverse genius, died the same year at the age of 28. Oskar Kokoschka, four years his senior, died only four years ago at the age of 94. Of the three, he was the Ninety drawings and watercolors by these three Viennese artists have been assembled in a Paris show intended to suggest something of the specific flavor-and spirit of the Austrian cultural world at that time (the selection of Kokoschka's drawings breaks off at

"Decadent" was a term that a number of artists of the day used as a banner. It implied that, contrary to what was widely assumed at the time, human history was not a chronicle of simple and regular progress that the idea of progress itself was somewhat spurious, and that the artist claiming this qualification of decadence was aware that something was awry in art. It implied that the times themselves were out of joint. One may also assume that the cultural issues that ultimately led to the breakdown of the European geographical structure after 1918 were already percepuble to thoughtful persons — a notioo well illustrated in Robert Musil's celebrated oovel "The Man Without

Klimt is best known for his precious and sensuous paintings of women and couples wrapped in many-colored cloth on a gold ground — a combination adapted from the Byzantine mosaics which had im-

Klimt, with his sturdy peasant face, is in fact quite the contrary of the effete decadent of his day and his interest in women was perfectly straightforward, devoid of the uncomfortable strain so often found in the work of his contemporaries (Khnopff and Stuck, for

Schiele's specific genius I described as perverse without actually implying any judgment that the term might suggest. Even today, when so many strong statements have been made by more recent artists omeone like Francis Bacon — anyone looking at Schiele's drawings of the human body can only be impressed by the quasi-medical and even surgical eye with which he observes it, by the extraordinary, sulfuric mordancy of his vision and his line. The term perverse applies to his work because this is something be sought to bring to the fore. The bodies and faces be portrays are wiry, some of them almost cadavers. His women often appear to be seducing the viewer with their eyes while their bodies look like uninhabited anatomies. Others, however, radiate an astonishing erotic intensity and the draftsman's line is almost always uncannily purposeful.

Next to the not-so-innocent charm of Klimt and the biting brilliance of Schiele, Kokoschka comes across as a blunt force. There is a surprised innocence in his

Kokoschka seems to be more tender and quite incapable of recognizing and designating the schizoid distance from one's own body that is apparent in many of Schiele's subjects, or the refined erotic invitation that Klimt so well suggests.

More Polish Than the Poles

Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski continues his effort to reconcile the Polish people. His latest move is an amnesty for almost all political prisoners remaining since martial law ended Solidarity's days in December 1981, Plainly. he hopes to gain Poland a new measure of social peace and some international favor.

The general has come some distance — from a place, to be sure, where he should never have been. He has ended formal martial law; released political prisoners and allowed them a semi-public political role: partly opened the media and broadened a dialogue with the church. His actions have now taken bis government to the point where its basic authority will be tested. The next step, involving a need to accommodate Polish workers, is sharing of power. A one-party Communist state sitting in Moscow's shadow does not do that easily.

Lech Walesa, the Solidarity leader, understands the dilemma well. Ever the bargainer. he greeted the amnesty as "a great step toward national understanding provided it is fol-lowed with a step toward more pluralism in social organizations." Also a realist, he said that renewed "social" activity would have to be conducted "within reasonable limits." He knows how hard it is, and how necessary, to Leep another iron fist from crashing down.

Does the United States know? President Reagan has indicated some sensitivity to the Polish-dilemma. But under the surface of official thinking lies a tendency to see an opportunity to throw off the Communist-Soviet hold or at least to add to Moscow's costs of empire by keeping things in turmoil. As General Jaruzelski has satisfied its specific demands, the Reagan administration has tended to move on to a generalized demand for "meaningful" liberalization as the price of removing economic sanctions. The particular sanctions that Mr. Reagan evidently intends to lift now would leave in place the ones that really hurt.

Meanwhile, as part of his election-year strategy. Mr. Reagan is lifting some of the fishing sanctions that the United States imposed after the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan - despite the fact that Moscow is intensifying its attacks on Afghan rebels.

The United States cannot be more Polish more demanding of official concessions than Lech Walesa and the Catholic Church. In their respective ways they are conducting a negotiation with General Jaruzelski. They are sensitive to the extent of the hardship as well as to the limit of the leverage that the sanctions bestow. Mr. Reagan should be, too.

An Immigration Bill, Please

These are bleak days for immigration reform. The Democrats' national candidates, pandering to Hispanic leaders, parrot the unjustified claim that the Simpson-Mazzoli bill fosters discrimination against Mexican-Americans. Vice President Bush, joining the panderers, says that President Reagan would not sign anything discriminatory. The hill's sponsors have reason to fear that the necessary compromise between Senate and House versions will not survive a second close House vote.

But this essential reform has been pronounced dead before, America still needs to gain control of its borders, to abandon the lures to illegal immigration and to punish the hiring of illegal aliens. The reformers got this far by finely balancing regional interests and by subordinating partisanship. They should not yield now to opportunism in either party.

The three contenders for the Democratic presidential nomination outdid each other in opposing Simpson-Mazzoli as discriminatory. The party's vice-presidential candidate voted against it for opposite teasons, contending that amnesty for millions of illegals already in the country was unpopular in her Queens district.

Mere repetition will not prove the fears of discrimination, Employers who now hire Mexican-Americans will still need to hire Mexican-Americans. All they would have to do is verify, by means of an ethnically neutral telephone checking system, that a job applicant is a legal resident. Far from encouraging employers to avoid hiring Hispanics, as is charged, the law would deny any excuse to employers who might indeed want to discriminate.

If they focus on the merits, the Senate and the House should be able to reconcile their bills. The House's would grant amnesty to more recently arrived illegals. But government must at some point draw a line and then control the borders. And aliens must at some point be allowed out of the shadows without further fear of exploitation, More difficult is the House's open-ended allowance for "guest" workers in seasonal jobs. But that, too, can be narrowed and made fair. Where they can show real need, fruit and vegetable growers can be accommodated.

Both bills penalize illegal hiring, but the House rejected the Senate's criminal sanctions, Reform should oot founder on that difference. The important step now is to proclaim it illegal to lure illegal migrants with job opportunities.

Senator Alan Simpson and Representative Romano Mazzoli, the Republican and Demo-cratic sponsors of this measure, have already struck a great many impressive compromises. The Hispanic leaders do not speak for a unanimous constituency. This reform deserves to survive because it is one of those rare achievements, a truly outional response to a problem recognized by all Americans.

The Extreme Right Assembles

The Group of the European Right, formed for the first time by the fascists, conforms to the rules by consisting of more than 10 members from not less than three countries. Ten are from France, led by the formidable Jean-Mane Le Pen, five from the Italian Social Movement and one from the [National Political Union in Greecel, It may be depressing, even disgusting, that only 40 years after the fall of Mussolini and Hitler (and only 10 after that of the Greek colonely) there are free Europeans tendy to vote for neo-fascists. But that is a matter of opinion, regardless of whether the cast majority of Europeans share it.

Of the EC countries, only West Germany has a law banning parties with fascist policies. But it is also West German experience with neo-fascism which most clearly points the way to dealing with such phenomena. A democratic consensus against extremism of any kind, and recourse to the courts when radicals break the law, is the only legitimate democratic method of restraining them.

Swedish Neutrality: Crisis in the North?

S TOCKHOLM — In the area above northern Norway, which can be reached by land most easily through Sweden, the Soviets bouse roughly two-thirds of their SSBNs (ballistic missile-firing submarines) protected by roughly two-thirds of their nuclear attack submarines. For the U.S. cruise missile, one flight path to Soviet largets would be over Swedish and Finnish airspace.

Soviet officials have been telling the Swedes that if they are neutral they must be in a position to shoot down any cruise missiles that transit Swedish airspace. There are fears throughout Scandinavia that at some point the Soviets may seize on their security treaty with Finland to demand the installation of Soviet radar, interceptors and anti-aircraft weapons in Finland for Soviet defense against cruise attacks.

Meanwhile, Soviet submarines bave been penetrating Swedish territorial waters. Views in Stockholm vary on why the Soviet navy has carried out such troubling missions. But it seems plausible that the underlying reason is that the Soviets want to be in a position to bring increasing pressure on the Swedes to take steps to counter the cruise missile threat. Another aim would be to raise alarm in Norway about the security of its northern territory unless it takes steps to mollify the Soviet Union. By Charles William Maynes This is the second of two articles.

Thus far, Swedish reactions have been firm. The public has turned resolutely anti-Soviet. A decade ago, approximately one-fifth of Swedes regarded the Soviet Union as unfriendly to Sweden. Today, four-fifths share that view,

All the major parties have agreed on an increase in defense spending. Swedish rules of engagement have been changed to permit senior officials to open fire at once on vessels violating. Swedish territorial waters. The government has decided to build a new generation of sirrely to decided to build a new generation of aircraft to replace the aging Viggen jet fighter.

But something unexpected has also happened.

For the first time in postwar history there is an open debate about Swedish security options. which boil down to three - accommodation with the Soviet Union, traditional neutralism or alliance with the Western powers. No responsible person is proposing any departure from the second option, but the fact that there is even talk about the theoretical possibility of options, particularly the alliance concept, is a major depar-ture in the postwar Swedish defense debate.

Despite the vast policy differences dividing the Reagan administration from a socialist government led by Olof Palme, Swedish officials give rather high marks to Washington for showing understanding of Swedish dilemmas. The Reagan administration has decided to help Sweden develop its new aircraft by permitting the export of U.S. manufactured engines. It has worked to ease trade problems involving exports of sensi-tive material to the Soviet Union. It appears to have been resurained in its reaction to the prac-tice of Swedish ocutralism on the world stage. Sweden's main problem, apparently, is within the Pentagon, where colonels who may remem-ber Swedish comments during the Vietnam War may not always move necessary papers as quickly as they otherwise might.

Nevertheless, as the United States and the Soviet Union play out the current chapter in their arms race with one another, more attention might be given to the effect that future missile deployments by either side could have on security arrangements in northern Europe that have served not only Sweden but also others well for more than four decades. The world does not need a crisis in the north to add to the already high level of tension in the heart of Europe.

Letter From Warsaw: History Is a Bother

One for the Insurgents, One for the Repressors

WARSAW — Why the censor let the comment pass is puzzling, but there in a Warsaw newspaper the other day was a most authoritative source admitting that Poland's 1944 manifesto of independence was penned and printed in the Soviet Union. This is not what Communist textbooks have long maintained about the historie document, which aligned postwar Poland with Russia. The official line holds that the declaration, whose 40th anniversary was celebrated on July 22, was drafted and printed in Chelm, the first city liberated from the Germans io what Stalin considered Polish territory.

But Edward Osobka-Morawski should know. He was the chairman of the Polish Committee of National Liberation, the Soviet-installed provisional leadership whose signatures appeared on the manifesto. In a telling aneedote, Mr. Osobka-Morawski recalled that because the Polish accented letter "o" (pronounced as a "u") does oot exist in Russian, his name was misspelled as "Usubka" in the initial versions of the proclamation run off on a Soviet press.

Such frank disclosures, embarrassing for Communist propagandists, inevitably surface in a country that tries to slant historical accounts to justify an unpopular government. This time of year brings an especially strong sense of tension in Poland between the sanitized official version of history and the authentic one.

Two major anniversaries highlight the unreconcilable countercurrents that have been swirling in Communist Poland since its birth: the yearnmust be shown to the Soviet Union.

seeds of disagreement and crisis had been planted and were to plague this nation for the next 40 years, it was: the start of all the trials and conflicts we see happening to this day." Said a prominent Polish historian:

"Two opposite interpretations of what happened in July 1944 have been in tension with each other ever since. Did it mark a renaissance of Polish independence and the coming to power of a democratic and homepropagandists alleged? Or was it instead evidence of Poland becoming part of an East European protector-ate under Soviet power?"

Unable to reconcile themselves with history, Polish authorities con-tinue to make conflicting gestures to the past, attempting to placate op-posing sides. Take, for instance, the planned construction of two monuments in connection with the July 22 and Aug. I anniversaries.

Ground for one structure was broken this month by Premier Wojciecb Jaruzelski. This memorial is dedicated to "those killed in the defense of people's power in Poland," meaning the Soviet-trained security forces who rooted out and killed members of the anti-Communist Polish Home Army after World War II. Poles are already referring derisively to the monument as the "ubelisk," a play on the initials "U.B." for "Urzad Bezpieczenstwa," the old name for Po-land's dreaded secret police.

Meantime, work on a popular memorial honoring the Warsaw uprising has been stalled by clashes over what to name the structure. On the surface the argument seems trivial, but it reflects a fundamental difference in political views

Many Poles want the monument dedicated simply "to the Warsaw up-rising" as a whole. But the authorities would prefer to mourn those who participated, without appearing to approve of the uprising's political aim. They have suggested dedicating the structure "to the heroes of the Warsaw oprising." After months of impasse, the government has suspended the special committee set up three years ago to plan the memorial. A provisional board, expected to be more compliant, was appointed to prepare a new construction schedule.

Noting the contradictory characters of the two monuments going up, a Polish writer remarked: "One they raise for those who fought in the uprising, and the other for those who murdered people like those who fought in the uprising."

Historical awareness among Poles, particularly about the 20th century, got a big boost during the 1980-81 Solidarity period, when the nation appeared to embark on a frenzied effort to explore those personalities and events that Communist censors had obscured in the name of ideology. The Januelski regime has recognized that it cannot roll back social consciousness as easily as it crushed the Solidarity trade union movement.

Authorities observe, if only perfunctorily, such previously taboo or potentially embarrassing anniversaries as the signing of Poland's first democratic constitution in 1791, the bloody worker revolts of 1956 in Pozpan and 1970 in Gdansk, and the signing of the 1980 worker-state acgrown government, as Communist cords that gave rise to Solidarity. Other episodes, such as the 1940

Soviet execution of several hundred captured Polish officers at Katyn, remain unacknowledged. Officially, they are unremembered. The teaching of history is still often subject to political and ideological manipulation. In a remarkably open exchange published this month in the Catholic paper Przeglad Katolicki, a group of reform-minded historians attacked the government for failing to incorporate many of their recommended revisions in a new school curriculum. "We were presented with faits accomplis," Andrzej Zakrzewski complained. Replied the Ministry of Education's representative. Edward Micrzwa, "The decisions are made not only by historians but also by politicians. We have guidelines which we must observe."

Some historians contend that history courses should end at 1945. Communist rule, they say, is still an open period and therefore does not afford a historical perspective.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Proliferation or Not?

You reported on July 17 fin "Western Nations Tighten Nuclear Export Controls," by Leslie H. Gelb) that the Western states in the Nuclear Suppliers Group (the London Club) secretly met in July and "agreed that they had to do more to prevent the spread of the ability to build nuclear weapons." Indeed this is a critical issue, and it is now essential that the COMECON members of the London Club also endorse this agreement.

However, major problems remain with regard to the action of the nuclear weapon states and their manifest lack of movement toward agreement on multilateral nuclear disarmament. In the summer of 1985 the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty review conference will be held. In your May 19 editions, columnist Jonathan Power argued forcefully that "it is time to start considering how to improve and sustain" the treaty. The sustenance of the treaty is likely to be undermined while its "depository states" — the United States, the Soviet Union and the United Kingdom — manifestly ignore Article VI, which reads in part: "Each of parties to the treaty undertakes to pursue negotiations in good faith oo effective measures relating to the cessation of the nuclear arms race at an early date." A recent example of the flagrant ignoring of the spirit and letter of the treaty was reported in the Inter-national Herald Tribune by Milton Benjamin ("U.S. Officials Admit Use of Phaonium From Britain to Make Nuclear Arms," March 19), who explained how Britain transferred military plutonium to the United States between 1976 and 1978 for use in the expanded U.S. weapons arsenal. The treaty's Article I states: "Each nuclear weapons state party to the treaty undertakes not to transfer to any recipient whatsoever nuclear weapons or other nuclear explosive devices." Plutonium, of course, is the prime nuclear explosive.

Now there is debate in Britain and the United States over plans to use a further lour metric tons of plutoni-um, transferred from the British civil stockpile between 1964 and 1971, in the U.S. weapons program.

Are the United States and Britain scrious about nuclear nonproliferanon and prepared to give leadership in these matters? If they do not, they will be found guilty of more than the "inattention" toward nonprolifera-tion that the Washington Post editorial "Aiding Nouprohferation" (IHT. July 16) suggested has thus far been noted in the U.S. administration.

As Arend Meerburg suggests (Letters, July 18), a verifiable freeze on fissionable materials directly manufactured for warheads is an important start. But it is not enough. DAVID LOWRY.

Iran-Iraq: If the World CONOMIC SCENE Wanted. By Mansour Farhang Bennington, Vermont B Western intelligence analysts, have been surprised in recent weeks as Ayatollah Khomeini has apparently put off a major new offensive second live.

as Ayatollah Khomeini has apparent-ly put off a major new offensive against Iraq. The underlying reason would appear to be that his economic and military capacity to light the war effectively is fast diminishing. Iran's joint chief of staff, General

Zahir Nezad, has maintained since June 1982 that Iran lacks the necessary armaments and logistical sup-port to defeat Iraqi armed forces on its own territory. Several prominent clerics, who are concerned about stability in post-Khomeini Iran, have privately asked the ayatollah to modify his position on the war.

The ayatollah seems to be con-vinced that military conquest of Iraq is highly improbable, but he has stub-bornly insisted that the war of attrition can eventually topple the regime of President Saddam Hussein and pave the way for Iraqi fundamental. ists to take over the government.

The central assumption in this unlikely scenario is that Iran could con-tinue to export oil without serious interruption — for oil revenues are indispensable to Iran's active and threatening approach to the stalemated conflict. That is why the counterstrategy of Iraq has been to try to blockade Iran's main oil terminal. The fall in Iran's oil exports in the last three months - from 1.9 million barrels a day to an estimated 600,000 — has begun to shed considerable doubt on the ayatollah's design.

The ayatollah may also have begun to doubt his own popularity in the. Arab societies along the Gulf. He used to elaim that the Saudi and Kuwaiti governments would not dare to take military action against fran because it could lead to mass opris-ings. The Saudis greatly surprised him in Jone by downing an Iranian tacks against Saudi tankers.

The ayatollah is bold in praising martyrdom and ruthless toward his critics, but he is not at all reckless when the stability of his regime is at stake. As the absolute ruler of Iran.f he has alternated between crusadin and pragmatic paths. calculation of costs or consequences: as a pragmatist he pays close attenaccomplished in any given circumstances. Thus, in the first 20 months of the war, when Iraqis were occupyof the war, when trachs were occupying fram, be asked only for a return to the prewar status quo. Once the Iraqi troops were expelled in June 1982, he began to demand that Saddam Hussein be removed from power. The financial cost of the war has : become an enormous burden on Iran, 🤌 and one of the main reasons for its crinical dependence on oil revenues.

Yet satisfying the growing oeed for imported food, spare parts, medicine and consumer and industrial goods is ultimately more important for the functioning of the regime.
In the last fiscal year Iran paid $25 billion for imports but took in only some $21 billion in oil revenues. To make matters worse, since the hostage crisis it has been paying cash for all its international purchases — and no country is likely to extend it much credit in the present situation.

If the reduction in oil exports persists for another six months, the aya-tollah will find it extremely difficult to maintain his intransigent attitude toward the Arab states of the Gulf. He will not make peace with Saddam Hussein: real peace between fran and Iraq must await the disappearance of both leaders. But he might be willing to consider some kind of de facto

the initial Iraqi invasion of Iran helped the ayatollah consolidate his power and eliminate critics of his theocracy. For nearly four years the war has enabled him to justify his country's immense economic problems. But in his message to the opening session of the new Majlis he instructed the Islamic legislators to give top priority to unemployment, inflation and housing shortages.

That is a dramatic shift from a man who used to demean economics as "fit only for donkeys." The change should be taken as a sign that the Iran's acceptance of commercial shipping in the Gulf for all nations, including Iraq. The present oil glot makes this demand quite credible. As Iran's principal oil customers, Japan and West Germany can be very influential in this regard.

So long as Ayatollah Khomeini and Saddam Hussein remain in power, only such concerted efforts by the industrial countries can produce an effective end to the longest and most destructive armed conflict in the modern history of the Middle East.

Opposing-Aims Policy Finds Record Net Home in the White House

By LEONARD SILK

New York Times Service

EW YORK - Has the Reagan administration, as this year's economic data suggest, discovered a way of achieving strong but noninflationary growth? Or is the economy's current performance a stroke of luck that

One economist who can argue that the Reagan record is no Tuke but stems from deliberate policy decisions is Robert Mun-fell, a professor at Columbia University.

In 1971, Mr. Mundell put forth a bold proposal at the Clare-mont international monetary conference in Bologna, Italy. His proposition was that, to cure stagilation, or economic stagnation combined with inflation, monetary and fiscal policy should be

Monetary and fiscal

Mundell contended.

policy should be

aimed in opposite directions: monetary policy to bring down inflation and fiscal policy to stimulate economic

This proposal shook the conference to its roots, as this correspondent well remem-bers. Until the Mundell proposal, as the Bologna conference organizer, Professor Randall Hinshaw of the Claremont Graduate School in California, explained, the general view among economists had been that monetary policy and fiscal policy were simply complementary ways of dealing with depression or inflation.

They had taken the view that depression should be attacked by "some combination of expansion ary monetary and fiscal policies and that inflation should be reduced by some combination of restrictive monetary and fiscal measures," he added.

But Mr. Mundell argued that it was impossible to deal with the new economic phenomenon of stagflation by pointing fiscal and monetary policy in one direction, whether toward stimulus or restraint. For stimulus alone, aimed at curing stagnation, would aggravate inflation, he said, while restraint alone, aimed at curbing inflation, would aggravate stagnation and unemploy-

R. Mundell invoked the rule of Jan Tinbergen, the Dutch economist who in 1969 shared the first Nobel Memorial Prize in Economic Science, namely that the number of policy "targets" must be matched by an at least equal number of appropriate policy iostruments.

Thus, to hit the two policy targets of lower inflation and higher growth, Mr. Mundell urged governments to use two separate policy instruments, monetary policy to check inflation and fiscal policy to spur growth.

On the fiscal side, Mr. Mundell was mainly concerned with taxes; he proposed a program of tax reductions aimed at business and intended to stimulate investment and productivity. Mr. Hinshaw observed that "Professor Mundell's ideas have clearly influenced the policies of the Reagan administration." But he adds: "In fairness to Mundell, it should be emphasized that in certain important respects his policy advice has not been fol-

"His program did not support either a reduction or a threatened reduction in federal expenditure; nor did it support a shift in federal expenditure from social programs to national defense," Mr. Hinshaw added. Mr. Mundell did, however, favor a policy of monetary restraint and also argued that the international regime of floating-exchange rates, which the administration supports, was a primary source of global economic instability.

But the adjustment process, under a quasi-Mundellian, twolarget, two-weapon economic polic smooth and easy, as conducted by the Federal Reserve and the Reagan administration. In 1981-82, tight money sent interest rates soaring and dumped the economy into steep recession, driving unemployment to a postwar peak of almost 12 percent. Alarmed over the depth of the slump, the Fed in mid-1982 dropped its professed "monetarism," stressing control of the money supply and ignoring interest rates, and turned monetary policy around, pointing it io the same direction as fiscal stimulus. This looked non-Mundellian, but one could argue that the fiscal-monetary balance was wrong and the slump forced a correction. By the end of the year, the economy was growing again. But (Continued on Page 9, Col.3)

The Associated Press DETROIT — General Motors Corp. reported Friday record sec-ond-quarter earnings of $1.6 bil-lion, including a tax break of $422

Although a record for a second quarter, the amount was just short of a record for any quarter. That was set in this year's first quarter when GM earned $1.61 billion.

GM's profit pushed the first-half earnings of the four major Detroit-based automakers, GM, Ford Motor Co., Chrysler Corp. and American Motors Corp. to more than $6.6 billion, eclipsing the full-year record of $6.15 billion set last year. GM in the second quarter of last year made $1.04 billion. This year's

Continental Chief Faces Hard Task

But Swearingen Is Called Tough, Uncompromising

By Peter Behr and Kevin Klose

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — Not since Lee A. lacocca stepped in front of the television cameras in 1979 to declare that Chrysler Corp. would survive has a business executive faced the kind of public rela-tions challenge that now confronts John E. Swear-

Mr. Swearingen, 65, a tough, outspoken chemi-cal engineer who ran Standard Oil Co. of Indiana for 23 years, has come out of retirement to head Continental Illinois Corp. in its darkest bour. He is charged with persuading depositors and borrowers that Continental Illinois bank can right itself.

He was the only candidate to head Continental Illinois Corp., the bolding company that owns the bank, according to William D. Isaac, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. The FDIC proposed to take effective control of Continental on Thursday after committing a potential $3.7 billion to save the Chicago bank from failing.

That figure represents the $4.5 billion the government will receive in loans, minus the $800 million that may end up being the shareholders' cootribution, through their new shrunken equity,

Mr. Swearingen's stature as a leader of Chicago's business community, the home base of Standard of Indiana, and his reputation as an administrator made him the obvious choice, Mr. Isaac said. Mr. Isaac also recruited William S. Ogden, 56, former vice chairman of Chase Manhattan Bank. to be chairman of Continental Illinois National Bank and Trust Co. And although Mr. Swearingen will run the holding company and Mr. Ogden its banking subsidiary, Mr. Swearingen suggested they would share authority.

Both will make a salary of $600.000 a year, a sum that did not make Mr. Swearingen blush, given the "enormous task that lies ahead." "We're going to form a team here." Mr. Swearingen said at a news conference in Chicago. There was never any question of where the final authority lay at Standard of Indiana during Mr.

Swearingen's long tenure.

Fortune magazine, whose editors selected Mr.

Swearingen last March as a member of the U.S.

John E. Swearingen

Business Hall of Fame, called him a "charismatic autocrat."

Taking over as Standard's president in 1958, he set the company's path firmly against the grain of prevailing oil industry doctrine by embarking on an ambitious oil and gas exploration program designed to build up the company's anemic hold-

That seemed an unpromising strategy at the time, with government price controls holding down profits from domestic production, but Mr. Swearingen pushed on. The company acquired huge acreages of oil and gas leases, often passing up the high-cost offshore tracts in favor of onshor areas that other companies' geologists had picked

Trade Deficit Of U.S. Widened Slightly in June deficit. Washington Pixe Service A Commerce Department study. WASHINGTON — The Commerce Department reported on Friday that the U.S. merchandisetrade deficit widened in June to $8.9 billion. The figures contrasted with the stream of bright economic oews that has been coming from the government this month.

June's $8.9-billion trade deficit was just slightly higher than the May deficit of $2.2 billion — the lowest in five months. But both figures are far less than the record high monthly deficit of $12.2 billion set in April.

The June totals brought the defi-cit for the first half of the year to $59.67 billion, more than twice as high as the figures for the first six months of 1983. On an annual basis, the deficit for the first half of the year would total $119.5 billion. well above last year's $69.4-billion record-high deficit.

A Commerce Department study estimated that this year's deficit could soar as high as $130 billion. As a result of a easing in the growth in the deficit in the past two months, bowever, a Commerce Department trade economist. David Lund, said the figure would likely be about $120 billion for 1984.

Even though the increase in the deficit slowed during the past two months over the record pace of the first four months of the year, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige said there is more bad news coming,

Avco's Board Rejects Offer By Leucadia

The Associated Press NEW YORK - Avco Corp. said Friday that its board of directors had voted unanimously to reject a merger offer from Leucadia National Corp. that would have been worth nearly $1 billion.

Leucadia had no comment on Avco's rejection of the company's offer to pay $40 per common share and $80 per preferred share of Avco's stock.

At those prices, the offer would have been worth $934 million for the nearly 20.2 million shares of common stock and 1.6 million shares of preferred stock.

Leucadia National, a holding company for the consumer fi-nancing and real estate firm Leucadia Inc., had ontlined on Thursday the proposed "cash merger or other business combination" in a letter to Avco.

In Thursday's letter, Leucadia said it would reduce its offer to $36 a share for common stock and $72 a share for preferred stock if Avco refused its initial offer and proceeded with a planned public offering of common stock

Judge Curbs Bell Diversification

By Peter W. Barnes

NEW YORK --- A U.S. District judge has moved to slow the diversification by former Bell telephone. companies into nonregulated ventures, telling them to concentrate on providing local telephone service, at least for now.

Io a harshly worded 65-page or-der, Harold H. Greene established on Thursday a formal procedure. built on four new legal tests, for reviewing requests from regional telephone companies for expand-ing into businesses such as realestate sales, international telecommunications consulting and equipment leasing.

In effect, the ruling merely formalizes the process already used in considering such requests. The order was seen more as a warning to the seven regional telephone companies, which were spun off from the Bell System in January, to tem-per their ambitious plans for diversifying into nontelephone business-

"Their role is not to provide a source of rate-payer funds, credit and other assets to finance competitive ventures, nor were they meant to be a vast conglomerate in which telephone service is relegated to a subordinate place," Judge Greene

"Yet that is what is threatened rejected only BellSouth's request to by the broad diversification efforts supply the National Aeronautics

Spokesmen for most of the regional companies, which collectively bad nine filings pending before udge Greene for permission to begin new ventures, said they could not comment on the ruling because their respective legal departments had not yet read the order.

But Barbara Smith, speaking for US West, the holding company for the Northwest part of the United States, said: "We don't have any problems with it. We are in compliance with the specific criteria these are all things we had anticipated.

In March, US West sought approval to allow its BetaWest unit. which handles the company's realestate sales and development operations, to sell its services to outside clients. US West said the company has saved it $1.7 million in commission expenses so far this year. A second filing, concerning mobile radio service, was filed in April.

> The order came three days after Representative Timothy E. Wirth. Democrat of Colorado, and chairman of the House telecommunications subcommittee, said he would study whether regional telephone companies were planning to re-enter the long-distance telephone business, which is prohibited by a court order. The companies, he said, might be moving in that directions will be lifted.

MCI Communications Corp., a major long-distance carrier, praised Judge Greene's order Thursday, saying that BellSouth's effort to win a NASA contract was an attempt to expand into long-distance service. Bell South denied the charge.

NEW LOWS

MELBOURNE — Broken Hill Proprietary Co. Ltd., Australia's largest publicly traded company, said Friday its profit soared 154 percent in the year ended May 31 to a record 622.2 million Australian dollars ($523 million), from 244.8 million dollars a year earlier.

Broken Hill, which has interests in natural resources and steel, said revenue rose 19.5 percent to 5,39 billion dollars, from 4.51 billion dollars the year before.

It said each of its divisions boost-ed carnings during the year, and the steel division rebounded from last year's loss of 144.3 million dol-lars with a profit of 72.3 million.

NEC Corp. Expects Growth

TOKYO — NEC Corp. said Friday that it expects further growth in the current year ending March 31 with continuing increases sales. The Japanese company said it forecast its consolidated net income in the current year will reach 58 billion yen ($238.3 million), up 30 percent.

Perry, an associate editor of Rolling Stone magazine, has attempted to write another study of the psychedelic community that flourished with such abandon in the San Francisco of the mid-60s.

Apparently the passage of time has not given Perry any new or particularly interesting perspectives on the subject: his book is a plodding, chronological compilation of dates, statistics and mildly entertain-

No doubt Perry's use of expressions like "mind-blowee" and "far-out" is supposed to recall the heightened language of the '60s, but he never finds a verbal equivalent - as Wolfe so cleverly did - for the frenctic madness of the times. Unless, that is, the reader is supposed to take passages of fuzzy writing and non sequiturs as evocative examples of what it's like to be stoned. What are we to make of such statements as "the official news was a dark background of wickedness and suppidity"? And what is the activist Chet Helms actually doing, when he is described as a guy who's been "talking up energies"

Certainly, the book does seem aimed more at individuals who, like Perry, experienced the Haight-Ashbury first-hand, than at less privileged readers. Who else would care that in the fall of 1966 "news content was receding in the Oracle," a local paper?

Unhappily, Perry's efforts to take a larger view are equally banal. They either take the form of trite aphorisms: "It is our lot to fail and be deluded much of the time, particularly in the fires of youth." Or sappy apologias that recall Charles Reich at his worst in "The Greening of America": "The Haight

paranoia, violence and random discord. For all the declarations that "the God of the New Age Is Love," tensions continued to grow between the community's disparate populations — the bikers and the acid heads, the mystics and the anarchists - and the neighborhood found it increasingly difficult to assimilate the growing numbers of runaways and thrill-seekers who began to gravitate there. As speed and heroin became the dominant street drugs, many Haight residents took to carrying guns to protect themselves from junkies.

ably given to feelings of nostalgia for the period in which they were young and their energies, unaccommodated. Romanticizing the past, however, tends to result in distortions of history. As Perry's chronicle suggests, most of the hippies who hung out in the Haight were oever really interested in political or social issues. Unlike student radicals and civil rights activists - with whom, there was considerable tension — they were more interested in finding an aesthetic or religious alternative to "straight" society, and in having some good, old-fashioned fun.

■ New Zealand Gets Games

The Commonwealth Games Federation has awarded the 1990 Commonwealth Games to Auckland, New Zealand, The Associated Press reported. New Delhi and Perth, Australia, site of the 1962 Games, also sought the games.

The 54-nation federation met Thursday in Los Angeles. A special committee of the federation also sidestepped a smouldering conflict over English sports re-lations with South Africa that threatened to disrupt the 1986 games in Edinburgh.

The African Commonwealth countries have been seeking to bar England from the Edinburgh Games because of the English Rug-by Union team's tour of South Af-rica earlier this year, which they claim violated the Gleneagles and Brisbane agreements outlawing sports links with South Africa.

Officials of several participating countries said it was highly unlikely that the Commonwealth Games Federation would bar England from games being held on British

Georgie Clark's 40 Years Of Shooting Grand Canyon

By Ann Japenga

GRAND CANYON, Arizona

For eight days, the river runners had gloried in stunning rock-wall vistas as they bounced through one of the wildest stretches of white water in the

As their raft motored toward Emery Falls, the passengers dug into their waterproof duffels for camera sear. Jockeying for positions to the bow, they began snapping pictures as yet another wonder of the Grand Canyoo came

Clad in a leopard-striped leotard, their skipper stood in the stern of a clumsy-lonking vessel: a 27-foot neoprene raft lashed side hy side with two smaller ones. Her features were slightly skewed, her skin was folded and her hair hung in blonde tangles. Io one hand was the tiller, in the other a beer

Georgie Clark, 73, pioneered commercial river running in the Grand Canyon. She has navigat-ed the rapids of the Colorado more times than any person.
Twice she did it in a life jacket. This is her 40th year on the river. Harvey Hall, a ourse from Phoenix who has been a boatman for Clark for 10 years, said: She's sort of a mystery lady. She tells you enough to keep your in-terest but you oever really know

When Clark married during her second year of high school in Chi-cago, it soon became apparent that her oew husband, Harold Clark, was not a kindred spirit.

"I'm afraid I've always been quite independent," Clark wrote in her sutohiography, "Georgie Clark: Thirty Years of River Running" (Chronicle Books, San Francisco). "Poor Harold. All he ever wanted was to settle down with a wife and live the rest of his life in ooe city. During the re-mainder of our marriage he was just never able to do this."

If Harold Clark was miscast, their daughter, Sommona Rose, was as perfect a companion as an adventurer could ask for. Together, mother and daughter scaled Winters she spends in a Las Vegas and turned the river's raging hundreds of peaks. They ice-skat-warehouse replacing worn gear spring runoffs into slower, more as they pedaled, 17-year-old Sommona Rose was struck by a car and killed Soon after, Clark began hiking the canyon country of Arizona and Utah with a companion, walking for days with nothing but canned tomatoes to sustain her. She went at it with a fierceness; it seemed to be the only thing that -a tradition Clark started years made life bearable after losing Sommona, she said, When she first glimpsed the Colorado River twisting along the bottom of the Grand Canyon, Clark knew it was a place where she would be spending a lot of time. Georgie's Royal River Rats is and patching rafts, including the big three-raft G-boat that she invented and only she handles.

It takes her seven days to prepare for each 330-mile, 10-day trip. She rises at 4 a.m. daily, on the river or not. Clark lays out supply bags for each of the main and backup engines, making sure she has the right kind of spark plug for each motor. She can't afford to leave anything behind because there are no parts stores along the river.

At Lee's Ferry, Clark and the boatmen inflate the rafts and tie down the gear. After two and a half days working on the beach, they are ready to greet the passen gers, each of whom has paid $750. "I mtend to keep working as long as I have good health," she said. The National Park Service seems to agree that she is fit; they've just renewed her concession license for another decade. All day on the river, Clark consumes little but beer. The brew is such an integral part of her diet, one boatman said, that when she decided to cut back her consumption one summer, she lost an alarming amount of weight.

At her sister's home, where Clark stays when she's not on the river, she has six cats, a varying number of dogs and birds and two desert tortoises. For years Clark had a mongrel named Sambo who took every river trip, strapped in through the rapids.

longer allows pets on the river.
While the passengers sip coffee with blackberry brandy at dusk - she slips away to the raft. This is the time of day when Clark remembers the canyon the way it used to be.

Gien Canyon Dam was completed in 1964. The National Park Service started patrolling the canyon bottom four years later. Before that, there were no rangers on the river, and few rafters. "I owned this canyon practicalburros and L"

"No one will ever have the freedom I had," she muses, "I used to be able to come up from Green River, Wyoming, on the water all the way through the Grand Can-yon." It is a trip of nearly 1,100 miles (1,760 kilometers).

The most important lesson she learned from her mother was never to feel sorry for herself. Clark said. They lived in a cold-water tenement in Chicago. The heater was often broken and Clark and her brother and sister had to stand in line for the toilets along with the other tenants.

Some of the other river runners regard Clark's ways as antiquated, throwbacks to a time when the river was more dangerous. Some would like to see her abandon the G-boats, adopt a modern single raft and provide guests with iced drinks and gourmet food.

After Sommona Rose was born, Clark left the baby with her mother in Chicago and she and her husband migrated to New York City. It was there that she learned to ride a racing hicycle. Then, one day, she informed her husband: "When I get my pay-check on Friday, I'm going to California. You can come along if yon want "

A divorce followed in California, and Clark took up flying with

In all her years of long-distance bicycling, hiking and pulling oars on the Colorado, Clark was never to develop much brawn. She's 5 feet, 6 inches (168 centimeters) and at the season's close in Sep-tember she's down to 115 pounds (52 kilograms). Her first daredevil trip down the Colorado was a matter of economics. She wanted to run the river and she couldn't afford a boat. Carrying only life jackets and a malt can full of powdered coffee, dehydrated soup and sug-ar candy, Clark and a reluctant companion, Harry Aleson, hiked 20 miles in the summer of 1945 into the canyon.

They jumped into the water, an obstacle course of logs, rocks and whirlpools. Each wave that crashed over them was laden with Sixty miles and three days later, they washed into the backwaters of Lake Mead, apparently the first people to swim a major portion of the river.

Since John Wesley Powell first ran the river in 1869, up until 1955, when Clark developed her unsinkable G-boats, fewer than 300 people had traversed the Grand Canyon of the Colorado. Clark's three-boat raft opened the river to everyone, old and young. Last year an estimated 14,000 persons went down the Colorado through the Grand
